Dear Sir or Madam,

I would like to write to ask you to consider harsher penalties against Microsoft. My role in various IT departments over the past 14 years has lead me to realize that the company has aggressively participated in criminal business practices.

While working for a competitor in 1992 I was shocked to learn that Microsoft would bundle for free their office application with any system sold running windows 3.x, while our product could not begin to bundle that software for free.

Today this has been repeated by missing the .net in the breakup of the company. While this was ignored during the discussion of breaking the company into separate business units, it is the train barrelling down the internet track that we cannot avoid.

Please feel free to contact me for any further information you may need or may want to request.

Regards,

Don
